Fun Fact Friday

A team at the Harvard School of Public Health published yet another study pointing to the potentially lifesaving effect of church attendance.

Surveys have long shown that religious believers in the United States are happier, healthier, longer-lived, and more generous to charity and to each other than are secular people.

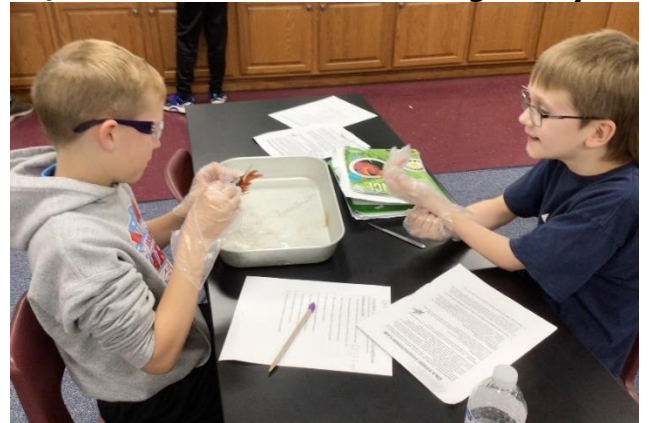

Health benefits correlated with attending church once a week or more, including reducing mortality by 20 percent to 30 percent over a 15-year period. Studies have shown that those who participate in religious services at least once a week are more optimistic and have lower rates of depression.
